Hearing first hand from survivors what had helped them really made us think about how we work with children and adult victims. The activities were also really interactive and engaging so no death by PowerPoint! I think hearing what had helped survivors. We often want to help our victims secure a conviction however what is actually important to them is having positive relationships with professionals, being believed and us planting the seeds of self-worth and seeing them for who they are (not just as a victim). It will change your practice for the better.
